Local artist spotlight Jessica Gonzales

Jessica Gonzales is the local artist behind many of the murals you've seen around town including the Rialto Theater, Antigone Books and the mural aptly named "The Road Unpaved" located at the Special Services Transit office (on the cover). We sat down with Jessica and asked some questions to get to know her better and to find out more about her work.

What the inspiration/story was behind the "The Path Unpaved" mural located at the Special Services- My inspiration behind The Path Unpaved was to convey a sense of exploration and the adventure of new experiences. It reflects the way we can learn and grow as individuals when we allow ourselves to break beyond the boundaries of what we know or feel comfortable within. It is about self-exploration, travel, and allowing ourselves to embrace the unknown. The woman in the mural is gazing towards new horizons, and the landscape behind her becomes progressively more and more abstract and rooted in fantasy. Because of the long configuration of the wall, the design guides viewers along the length of the mural and tells a story along the way, inviting viewers in close to see fine details and small vignettes hidden throughout. The mural itself not only depicts the notion of escaping the everyday routine, but also encourages viewers to do the same simply by interacting with the art.

Do you enjoy riding public transportation- I rode the bus as a high school student and off-and-on throughout my 20s. In high school I loved the bus ride after a long day of school. As an introvert I valued the opportunity to listen to my music and zone out without having to interact with anyone. There's something comforting and relaxing about knowing your transportation needs are being cared for while enjoying the scenery as it passes by. I sure wish the Sun Link Streetcar was around when I was in college – I'd have been on that thing constantly instead of carrying my heavy art portfolios on my long walks to and from the UA School of Art every day!

Where are you from and do you see the culture from that area impacting your work? I come from a military family, so we moved around a bit in my early years. I was born in Oklahoma City, OK, and then we moved to Germany, where I lived from age 6-12. We then moved to Tucson where I've resided ever since. Having spent my formative years in southern Arizona as a young adult, and discovering my identity and artistic voice here, I feel genuinely connected to Tucson as my home. My Mexican-American heritage combined with the rich culture of this city have a heavy influence on the way I express myself through art. I am visually inspired by the boldness of the shadows cast by the Arizona sun, the breathtaking sunsets, the vibrant and lively ways that Tucson's diverse cultures express themselves through design, music, and food. All of these elements play a role in my creative process and inform the choices I make when developing public art.

"Art is important to society because it allows people to have a dialogue about a wide array of topics while providing opportunities for individuals to interpret pieces in their own unique way. This is true for both the artist's creative process and consumption by the audience. Art depicts and showcases culture, especially public art. Public art is so important because it allows works to be viewed by people of all walks of life, and adds interest, beauty, and insight to its surroundings," stated Jessica.
